Glendale Public Libraries Have Gone Wireless

GLENDALE, Ariz. – Are you looking for a comfortable, pleasant spot to sit with your laptop and use the Internet? Of course, Starbucks and other coffee establishments come to mind as possibilities. Now, Glendale's three public libraries have high-speed wireless Internet access available for everyone.

Free access is provided in all public areas in the libraries, during hours the buildings are open. The user simply turns on the wireless card in their laptop computer, tablet PC or PDA and launches the Web browser. No special encryption settings are required. Prompts will ask for the Glendale Public Library card barcode and password. If a user does not have a library card, an Internet card can be obtained for free. One-time only users can obtain a guest card. Once the library's Internet Use Policy is accepted, the library's home page appears and surfing can begin.

A Wi-Fi brochure is available to help users troubleshoot problems getting online. A common issue has been having an incorrect phone number on file for the user.

Check out the Wi-Fi at the following city libraries:

- Glendale Main Library, 5959 W. Brown St., 623-930-3530

- Foothills Branch Library, 19055 N. 57th Ave., 623-930-3830
